COMMON SENSE,
On the King of England's SPEECH.

OF all the innocent paſſions which actuate the human mind, there is none more univerſally prevalent than curioſity. It reaches all mankind' and in matters which concern us, or concern us not, it alike provokes in us a deſire to know.

Altho' the ſituation of America, ſuperior to every effort to enſlave her, and daily riſing into importance and oppulence, hath placed her above the region of anxiety, it ſtill left her within the circle of curioſity; and her fancy to ſee the ſpeech of a man who had proudly threatened to bring her at his feet, was viſibly marked with that tranquil confidence which cared nothing about its contents. It was enquired after with a ſmile, read with a laugh, and diſmiſſed with diſdain.

But, as juſtice is due, even to an enemy, it is right to ſay, that the ſpeech is as well managed as the embarraſſed condition of their affairs could well admit of; and though ſcarce a line of it is true, except the mournful ſtory of Cornwallis, it may ſerve to amuſe the deluded commons and people of England, for whom it was calculated.

"The war," ſays the ſpeech, "is ſtill unhappily "prolonged by that reſtleſs ambition which firſt ex-"cited our enemies to commence it, and which ſtill "continues to diſappoint my earneſt wiſhes and dili-"gent exertions to reſtore the public tranquility."

How eaſy is it to abuſe truth and language, when men, by habitual wickedneſs, have learned to ſet juſtice at defiance. That the very man who began the war, who, with the moſt ſullen inſolence refuſed to anſwer, and even to hear the humbleſt of all petitions, who hath encouraged his officers and his army in the moſt ſavage cruelties, and the moſt ſcandalous plunderings, who hath ſtirred up the Indians on one ſide, and the Negroes on the other, and invoked every aid of Hell in his behalf, ſhould now with an air of affected pity turn the tables from himſelf, and charge on another the wickedneſs that is his own, can only be equalled by the baſeneſs of the heart that ſpoke it.

TO BE NOBLY WRONG IS MORE MANLY THAN TO BE MEANLY RIGHT, is an expreſſion I once uſed on a former occaſion, and it is equally applicable now. We feel ſomething like reſpect for conſiſtency even in error. We lament the virtue that is debauched into a vice, but the vice that affects a virtue becomes the more deteſtable: and amongſt the various aſſumptions of character, which hypocriſy has taught, and men have practiſed, there is none that raiſes a higher reliſh of diſguſt, than to ſee diſappointed inveteracy twiſting itſelf, by the moſt viſible falſhoods, into an appearance of piety it has no pretentions to.

"But I ſhould not," continues the ſpeech, "anſwer "the truſt committed to the ſovereign of a FREE "PEOPLE, nor make a ſuitable return to my ſubjects "for their conſtant, zealous, and affectionate attach-"ment to my perſon, family and government, if I con-"ſented to ſacrifice, either to my own deſire of peace, "or to their temporary eaſe and relief, THOSE ESSEN-"TIAL RIGHTS AND PERMANENT INTERESTS, up-"on the maintainance and preſervation of which, the "future ſtrength and ſecurity of this country muſt "principally depend."

That the man whoſe ignorance and obſtinacy firſt involved and ſtill continues the nation in the moſt hopeleſs and expenſive of all wars, ſhould now meanly flatter them with the name of a FREE PEOPLE, and make a merit of his crime, under the diſguiſe of their eſſential rights and permanent intereſts, is ſomething which diſgraces even the character of perverſeneſs. Is he afraid they will ſend him to Hanover, or what does he fear? Why is the ſycophant thus added to the hypocrite, and the man who pretends to govern, ſunk into the humble and ſubmiſſive memorialiſt?

What thoſe eſſential rights and permanent intereſts are, on which the future ſtrength and ſecurity of England muſt principally DEPEND, are not ſo much as alluded to. They are words which impreſs nothing but the ear, and are calculated only for the ſound.

But if they have any reference to America, then do they amount to the diſgraceful confeſſion, that England, who once aſſumed to be her protectreſs, is now become her DEPENDENT. The Britiſh king and miniſtry are conſtantly holding up the vaſt importance which America is of to England, in order to allure the nation to carry on the war: now whatever ground there is for this idea, it ought to have operated as a reaſon for not beginning it; and therefore they ſupport their preſent meaſures at their own diſgrace, becauſe the arguments they now uſe, are a direct reflection on their former policy.

"The favourable appearance of affairs," continues the ſpeech "in the Eaſt Indies and the ſafe arrival "of the numerous commercial fleets of my kingdom "muſt have given you ſatisfaction."

That things are not QUITE ſo bad every where as in America may be ſome cauſe of conſolation, but can be none for triumph. One broken leg is better than two, but ſtill it is not joy: and let the appearance of affairs in the Eaſt-Indies be ever ſo favourable, they are nevertheleſs worſe than at firſt, without a proſpect of their ever being better. But the mournful ſtory of Cornwallis was yet to be told, and it was neceſſary to give it the ſofteſt introduction poſſible.

"But in the courſe of this year," continues the "ſpeech "my aſſiduous endeavours to guard the ex-"tenſive dominions of my crown, have not been attend-"ed with ſucceſs equal to the juſtice and uprightneſs "of my views" ——what juſtice and uprightneſs there was in beginning a war with America the world will judge of, and the unequalled barbarity with which it has been conducted is not to be worn from the memory by the cant of ſnivelling hypocriſy.

"And it is with GREAT CONCERN that I inform you "that the events of war have been very unfortunate "to my arms in Virginia, having ended in the loſs "of my forces in that province."——And OUR great concern is that they are not all ſerved in the ſame manner.

"No endeavours have been wanting on my part" ſays the ſpeech "to extinguiſh that ſpirit of rebellion "which our enemies have found means to foment and "maintain in the colonies; and to reſtore to my DE-"LUDED SUBJECTS in America that happy and proſ-"perous condition which they formerly derived from a "due obedience to the laws."

The expreſſion of DELUDED SUBJECTS is become ſo hackneied and contemptable, and the more ſo when we ſee them making priſoners of whole armies at a time, that the pride of not being laughed at would induce a man of common ſenſe to leave it off. But the moſt offenſive falſhood in the paragraph, is the attributing the proſperity of America to a wrong cauſe. It was the unremitted induſtry of the ſettlers and their deſcendants, the hard labour and toil of perſevering fortitude that were the true cauſes of the proſperity of America. The former tyranny of England ſerved to people it, and the virtue of the adventurers to improve it. Aſk the man who with his axe hath cleared a way in the wilderneſs and now poſſeſſes an eſtate, what made him rich, and he will tell you the labour of his hands, the ſweat of his brow and the bleſſing of heaven. Let Britain but leave America to herſelf and ſhe aſks no more. She has riſen into greatneſs without the knowlege and againſt the will of England, and has a right to the unmolested enjoyment of her own created wealth.

"I will order" ſays the ſpeech "the eſtimates of the "enſuing year to be laid before you. I rely on your "wiſdom and public ſpirit for ſuch ſupplies as the cir-"cumſtances of our affairs ſhall be found to require. "Among the many ill conſequences which attend the "continuation of the preſent war, I muſt ſincerely re-"gret the additional burthens which it muſt unavoida-"bly bring upon my faithful ſubjects."

Strange! That a nation muſt run thro' ſuch a labyrinth of trouble, and expend ſuch a maſs of wealth to gain the wiſdom which an hour's reflection might have taught. The final ſuperiority of America over every attempt which an iſland might make to conquer her, was as naturally marked in the conſtitution of things, as the future ability of a giant over a dwarf is delineated in his features while an infant. How far Providence, to accompliſh purpoſes, which no human wiſdom could foreſee, permitted ſuch extraordinary errors, will be believed by ſome and doubted by others, and ſtill a ſecret in the womb of time, muſt reſt till futurity ſhall give it birth.

"In the proſecution of this great and important "conteſt," ſays the ſpeech, "in which we are en-"gaged, I retain a firm confidence in the PROTECTI-"ON OF DIVINE PROVIDENCE, and a perfect con-"viction in the juſtice of my cauſe, and I have no "doubt, but, that by the concurrence and ſupport "of my parliament, by the valour of my fleets and "armies, and by a vigorous, animated, and united "exertion of the faculties and reſources of my peo-"ple, I ſhall be enabled to reſtore the bleſſings of a "ſafe and honorable peace to all my dominions."

The king of England is one of the readieſt believers in the world. In the beginning of the conteſt he paſſed an act to put America out of the protection of the crown of England, and though Providence, for ſeven years together hath put him out of HER protection, ſtill the man has no doubt. Like Pharoah on the edge of the Red ſea, he ſees not the plunge he is making, and precipitately drives acroſs the flood that is cloſing over his head.

I think it is a reaſonable ſuppoſition, that this part of the ſpeech was compoſed before the arrival of the news of the capture of Cornwallis; for it certainly has no relation to their condition at the time it was ſpoken. But, be this at it may, it is nothing to us. Our line is fixt. Our lot is caſt. And America, the child of fate, is arriving at maturity. We have nothing to do but by a ſpirited and quick exertion, to ſtand prepared for war or peace. Too great to yield, and too noble to inſult; ſuperior to misfortune, and generous in ſucceſs, let us untaintedly preſerve the character we have gained, and ſhow to future ages, an example of unequalled magnanimity. There is ſomething in the cauſe and conſequence of America that has drawn on her the attention of all mankind. The world has ſeen her brave. Her love of liberty; her ardour in ſupporting it; the juſtice of her claims, and the conſtancy of her fortitude has won her the eſteem of Europe, and attached to her intereſt the firſt power of that country.

Her ſituation now is ſuch, that to whatever point, paſt, preſent or to come ſhe caſt her eyes, new matter riſes to convince her the is right. In her conduct towards her enemy, no reproachful ſentiment lurks in ſecret. No ſenſe of injuſtice is left upon the mind. Untainted with ambition and a ſtranger to revenge, her progreſs hath been marked by providence, and ſhe, in every ſtage of the conflict has bleſt her with ſucceſs.

But let not America wrap herſelf up in dulusive hope and ſuppoſe the buſineſs done. The leaſt remiſsneſs in preparation, the leaſt relax in execution, will only ſerve to prolong the war and increaſe expences. If our enemies can draw conſolation from misfortune, and exert themſelves upon diſpair, how much more ought we, who are to win a continent by the conqueſt and have already an earneſt of ſucceſs.

November 19, 1782.

BOSTON, February 4.

A Dutch ship, we are informed, is lost on the back of Cape Cod, and a number of the Crew perished.

CHATHAM, February 13.

In the course of last week, near 20 of the enemy (mostly of the provincial corps) came over to our people at the different posts on the lines. The contagion was so epidemic, that the officers on Staten-Island were obliged to patrole themselves, to prevent a total dissolution of their corps.

Last Thursday morning a detachment of the Jersey brigade, commanded by Capt. Bowman, who were joined by a party of militia, went across the Sound, on the ice, to the refugee post on Bergen Neck; where they captured three of the miscreants, one of whom was of a sable hue; they bayoneted a negroe, who refused to surrender. No artifice could induce them to sally out, therefore no other trophies than those above mentioned were obtained. The party returned the same morning without sustaining any kind of damage, except one man, who received a slight wound in the foot.

TRENTON, February 13.

We hear from Monmouth that on Friday evening, the 8th instant, about forty refugees, commanded by one Stevenson, a Lieutenant, came over from Sandy-Hook across the Gut, and thence into the country to a place near Pleasant Valley.—They visited the houses of sundry persons in the neighbourhood, from whence they took off upwards of twenty horses, five sleighs, which they loaded with plunder, and eight or nine prisoners, namely, Hendrick Hendrickson and his two sons, Garret Hendrickson, Peter Covenhoven, Esq. Samuel Bowne and son, and Jacques Denice.—They then made off with their prisoners and booty. At Garret Hendrickson's, having entered the house and made him prisoner, they went to the barn to take his horses and sleigh. In the mean time two young men, his son and one William Thomson, who slept in the second story of the house, being awaked by the noise below, secreted themselves till the enemy were gone to the barn, and then came down, escaped and went to the house of Capt. John Schenck, of Col. Holmes's regiment, whom they alarmed about an hour and an half before day. This gallant officer immediately collected a small party, left orders for as many as could be got together to follow him, pursued the refugees on the rout they had taken, and arrived at the Gut just as they had got the prisoners, two or three of the horses, and a small quantity of the other plunder carried over. He immediately attacked those which were with the remainder of the horses and plunder, and after a few fires, in which unfortunately young Mr. Thomson fell, and a Mr. Cotterel was wounded in the knee, he made them prisoners to the number of twelve, three of whom were wounded. Captain Schenck finding it impracticable to continue the pursuit for want of craft to cross the water, was returning with his recapture and prisoners, when he suddenly fell in with Stevenson and sixteen others, who had remained behind to secure the retreat and favour the passage of those who were before. A firing immediately ensued on both sides, but Captain Schenck ordering his men to charge and give the enemy the bayonet, they thought proper to throw down their arms and submit. This rencounter being altogether unexpected, eight of the prisoners first taken found means to escape. Captain Schenck was left Saturday forenoon on his way through Middletown with nineteen horses, five sleighs with the plunder which had been taken from the inhabitants, and one and twenty of the enemy prisoners. The people report that they huzzaed and triumphed as they returned to their boats, boasting of their success, and that the next time they would penetrate as far as Mount-Pleasant, several miles further into the country. Among the prisoners are several attrocious villains, who have, at different times, done much mischief in that part of the country.

PHILADELPHIA, February 20.

If we were to judge (says a correspondent) from some late publications, of the conduct of the rulers of Pennsylvania, for some time past, we should suppose them to be leagued with Dean and Arnold, to betray the state to the King of Britain; whereas nothing can be farther from facts and truth. From the zeal and activity of the last year's Assembly, Pennsylvania has acquired the honor of being the first state in the union that has paid her proportion of taxes in the Continental Treasury. The taxes for the present year (amounting to above 400,000 l. in specie) we hear, will be submitted to with patience, and paid with chearfulness and punctuality by the different counties in the State. Certainly these facts shew nothing like disaffection to the common cause in rulers or people. From the fidelity with which our rulers have adhered to the constitution, the people are daily more and more reconciled to it. The present Council have hitherto never asked for, much less exercised, any powers not granted to them by the constitution. Star Chamber practices are now happily abolished. The neutral and moderate characters have accommodated to our government, and have ceased to cast wishful looks towards Great-Britain. His Excellency the President of the state gives universal satisfaction, by his prudence, moderation and knowledge in business. In a word, Pennsylvania begins to enjoy with her sister states the blessings of liberty and independence. Agriculture, arts and commerce flourish every where, and the state enjoys, through the kindness of Heaven and the wisdom of her present rulers, in the midst of war, plenty, freedom, and most of the other blessings of peace.

Extract of a letter from St. Croix, Jan. 19, 1782.

"By an order of government no more letters of marque and reprisals are to be granted to the inhabitants of the Virgin Islands; and all that have been issued are called in. All the officers of the Admiralty of Tortola are displaced: So that we shall be no more troubled with their lawless and piratical vessels on our coast to hurt our trade."

Extract of a letter from St. Thomas, dated Jan. 19, 1782.

"As soon as Monsr. de Grasse returned from America he resolved an attempt on St. Kittts. On the 10th inst. he appeared off that island, and on the 11th he landed his troops at Basseterre without opposition, and took immediate possession of all the island, except the strong fortress of Brimstone Hill. All the shipping in the road fell a sacrifice, except a few which escaped and came down here. The French have made intrenchments very nigh the hill; and it is said they have thrown some shells into the fortifications. If that is the case it must soon fall, as Admiral Hood is not strong enough to give the besieged any assistance."

St. Thomas, January 22, 1782.

"The siege of St. Kitts is now going on. Last Friday four bomb batteries were compleated for twenty mortars each, and one shell was seen to fall over the hill. A few weeks I expect will reduce it, though Admiral Hood has sent word he will go to its relief."

The honourable the representatives of this state are now convened at the state-house in this city; and we have no doubt but that a very spirited exertion of the resources of the commonwealth will be the first matter to claim their attention.

The brigantine Fox, captain Steel, is arrived in our river from Cadiz, after a passage of 32 days. The advices received by her are contained in the following extracts of letters from that quarter.

Extract of a letter from Cadiz, dated Jan. 8, 1782.

"The late success of the combined arms in Virginia, has afforded a general satisfaction to the people of this kingdom, who seem heartily disposed to be our friends. The grand fleet put to sea a few days past, consisting of 44 sail of the line and a number of transports with troops on board: their destination is not known, but supposed to be for the Havanna. The Courier de la Europe, containing the king's speech, and debates of parliament, is here, and after lamenting their late bad success in Virginia, strongly recommend a prosecution of the war, which motion was carried by a large majority, and the supplies voted for the ensuing campaign. It therefore does not appear that we shall have a peace this year. It is reported that an embarkation of 6000 Hanoverian troops is to take place for America, to be there at the opening of the ensuing campaign.

"The siege of fort St. Philip continues to be carried on with great vigour. By the latest accounts from that place we have good grounds to believe, that the garrison will not hold out many weeks longer."

Extract of another letter from Cadiz, dated January 7.

"We just hear that count de Guichen, who sailed from Brest on the 11th ult. with nineteen sail of the line, has had an engagement with the British admiral Kempenfeldt. The issue is not as yet known, but if it is true, as is said, that the English had no more than 13 ships, we make no doubt but the advantage has been on the side of our allies."

We have great reason to believe that an action has lately happened in the West-Indies between the French and British fleets. A schooner from St. Thomas's, which she left on the 30th of January, brings an account, that a small vessel arrived there on that day from St. Christopher's, the people of which report, that the two fleets were seen engaged, but the event was not known. What seems to confirm this news, is the probability of the British fleet attempting the relief of St. Christophers, the principal fortress of which was at that time closely invested by the French army, while the fleet lay off, in order to cover their operations, and we conclude the action must have happened near that island.

FOR THE PENNSYLVANIA GAZETTE.

A GENTLEMAN of undoubted information begs leave to inform his fellow-citizens, that the Superintendant of Finance has taken the utmost pains to establish a fund for the payment of the interest due upon Loan-Office Certificates; and had his early attention to that business been seconded by ALL the States, that interest would have been paid some time ago. In the mean while, the Widow---the Orphan---and the honest and unsuspecting Whig---may rest assured that steps are now taking, which will probably enable the Congress in a few months to do them ample justice. It is to be hoped that those people, who, in common with our brave and worthy army, have discovered their patriotism in waiting with so much patience for the money due to them from Congress, will not, at this late hour, suffer themselves to be led into any acts that shall hurt our cause, or dishonour our governments. Whoever considers that America was surprised and hurried into the present war, without a knowledge in arms----without funds---without credit---without trade---and without allies---and under the influence of the calumnies of the British Court over every part of the world, will wonder that we have so long kept an army together, or supported any kind of government. A few months patience (under the present arrangement of the great departments of the States) will, we hope, place this country, in point of resources and knowledge, upon a footing with the oldest nations in Europe, and enable the Congress to do the strictest justice to every body that has served them with their blood, with their labour, or with their property.

TO THE PEOPLE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

WHEREAS I have been instigated, partly by the mortification of being twice rejected from a seat in Congress, and once from a seat in the Assembly, and partly by the suggestions of the Devil, to publish a number of falshoods in the Freeman's Journal, respecting the state of our affairs in Pennsylvania, as well as respecting the characters of sundry individuals in the state: And whereas I am now convinced, that if the above publications are believed to be true in New-York or in England, they will have a tendency to protract the war, and probably to draw the British arms to the state of Pennsylvania: I do hereby declare, that the assertions contained in the pieces with the undersigned signature are totally void of foundation, and I hope the good people of Pennsylvania will forgive me for my attempts to mislead and deceive them, as I intend my conduct hereafter shall be such as will merit their esteem and confidence. CENSOR.

OLIVIER and COMPANY,

RETURN their sincere Thanks to all those who have been pleased to favour them with their custom, and would further beg leave to inform them and the public, that they have now a good assortment of Mould CANDLES of their own manufacture, which they will dispose of at a reasonable rate, and hope for the continuation of their former custom.
